Political and Economic Implications of the Elections in Seoul and Busan

April 7, 2022

Election Results Send Sharp Message to Democratic Party

The April 7 mayoral elections in Seoul and Busan, the Republic of Korea's two largest cities, were a blow to the ruling Democratic Party (Minju Party) and President Moon Jae-in due to the decisive losses by the Minju candidates to those from the conservative People Power Party (PPP).

Most attention was focused on the Seoul election, as the Mayor of Seoul is widely considered to be the most powerful political leader in Korea after the President. There, Oh Se-hoon, the PPP candidate and mayor of Seoul from 2006 to 2011, won by a 57.5% to 39.2% margin over Park Young-sun, a former member of the Moon cabinet who had tried to distance herself from the national party.

In Busan, generally a more conservative city than Seoul, the PPP candidate Park Heong-joon, a former professor, Secretary General of the National Assembly and political aide to President Lee Myung-bak, won with 62% of the vote.

This election was marked by very high turnout for a bi-election, an indication of the growing disenchantment among voters over the policies under President Moon as he enters the final year of his mandated five-year term. Specifically, voters seemed to react to the accumulated fatigue from Covid-19 as the government struggles to contain new spread and roll out a vaccine program. This is telling, as the Minju Party won a large majority in the National Assembly elections last April due to the effectiveness of Covid management at that time. Now, the perception that it was the people, not the government, that helped contain Covid by following social distancing seems to have been a factor.

Additionally, voters were unhappy over the Moon government's failure to rein in escalating housing prices – and related high taxes – as well as a speculation scandal in the government agency with oversight over housing.

Among specific voting groups, voters in Seoul have tilted towards the Minju Party in recent years, but that changed in this election. Affluent and wealthy municipalities such as Seocho, Gangnam, and Songpa had a high turnout rate, and voted for Oh Se-hoon.

Source: Realtime (April 5-6)

Young men voted overwhelmingly for the PPP candidates, for the reasons cited above, and perhaps as a backlash against policies by the government aimed at supporting women. This is not to say that younger men are anti-feminist, but that they pride themselves on being different than older men on gender relations and felt that Moon policies may discriminate against them based on faulty assumptions. For people in their 30s concerned with buying houses and raising families, the housing issue was a major factor underlying support for the PPP.

The political lens now is focused on prospects for the President elections in April 2022, and names of possible candidates such as Lee Jae-myung, Yoon Seok-youl, Ahn Cheol-soo, Rhyu Si-min, Chung Sye-kyun and Kim Chong-in are already floating around.

In our view, the key issue for the Minju Party will be the effectiveness of the Covid-19 vaccination rollout. With only 2.9% of the population vaccinated to date, accelerating vaccines and returning to a more normal situation sooner than later is critical.

Implications for European Businesses Operating in Korea

Going forward, businesses should focus on the big picture while looking for ways to adapt to the new political circumstances. First, major internal and external challenges remain. The Moon government must focus on Covid-19 containment/vaccinations, boosting economic growth and employment for young people, cleaning up the real estate scandals, and managing foreign relations with the United States, China and Japan in an effort to salvage something on North Korea. It will be a difficult last year for the Moon government, made more complicated by its political status. The Seoul/Busan elections chastened him, and he has rededicated himself to resolving issues.

President Moon deserves credit for containing the economic damage from Covid, as Korea's real GDP rate of -1.0% in 2020 was the best in the OECD. Projections for growth in 2021 and 2022 are solidly over 3% as exports and Chaebol business rebound, but these projections are lower than the average for the G20, suggesting that the structural problems – in particular high youth unemployment and slow growth in the SME sector – remain.

Second, President Moon has some major initiatives underway, most notably the Korean New Deal, which includes the Digital New Deal and Green New Deal, and a new Net Zero 2050 carbon emission commitment. There are 10 specific projects such as the Data Dam, Smart Governance, Smart Healthcare, Green Technology, etc. aimed at increasing e-commerce, creating jobs, and reducing carbon emissions that have received budget support through 2025.

President Moon will work to advance these as far as possible as part of his legacy. In this context, it is also important to keep in mind that the Minju Party controls the National Assembly. The Digital New Deal and Green New Deal are forward-looking areas for some major Korean chaebol. Companies are making significant investments and adapting businesses in response, and the competition from other countries will put pressure on policymakers, so these programs are not likely to go away with a change in government.

For Mayor Oh, options for bold initiatives are likely limited by the fact that the Seoul City Council is dominated by the Minju Party, but he will be compelled to make progress in some areas with another mayoral election in 15 months.

As members of the ECCK know, there is no shortage of regulatory, standards and other issues that affect business in Korea. Amidst these political and economic dynamics, businesses must continue to work on their problems, but also keep an eye open for new opportunities. This requires that companies be smart about finding allies in both parties, building relations with the new mayors in Seoul and Busan, and identifying the right stakeholders and developing effective strategies for the government and National Assembly.

Nostimo - Homestyle Greek Restaurant in Korea

Eunsun "Sara" Park from Nostimo

Restaurants in Korea representing the Mediterranean region are still limited to Italian, a scattering of Spanish places, and some Moroccan restaurants, as well. Despite the positive perception of Greece both Koreans and non-Koreans alike have, finding homestyle Greek food in Korea has always been a challenge.

Nostimo, located not far from Naebang Station and within walking distance from Seorae Village, has planted the flag for the type of Greek cuisine that Greeks themselves enjoy at home. Opened in August 2020 by Todd Sample and Eunsun "Sara" Park, Nostimo has received a warm welcome from both the Korean and foreign community in Seoul and beyond for its menu of Greek standards like moussaka, souvlaki, spanakopita (spinach pie), and dolmadakia, or grape leaves stuffed with rice and lamb. In addition to these Mediterranean staples, visitors to Nostimo are also able to enjoy the restaurant's farm-to-table feta cheese, made in-house by Sara Park, and sprinkled generously on the Greek salad as well as on other dishes. Nostimo's homemade Greek yogurt is a customer favorite, while no Greek meal would be complete without something sweet afterward. In this light, our homemade baklava, galaktoboureko, or galatopita will satisfy anyone's desire for a Greek sweet, and even better when paired with a cup of Greek coffee.

So how did Nostimo come to be? Todd Sample and Sara Park had been running a food contents company called Eathentic which introduced restaurants all over Korea which serve authentic international food. In addition to social media, the company hosted diverse food culture events several times every month with the goal of sharing not only the flavors, but also the culture, region, and people behind the food, aspects which are generally missing from a typical restaurant experience. In short, Todd and Sara believe that when it comes to international food, "the more you know, the better it tastes!"

The onset of the COVID-19 pandemic put an end to these events, but not to the desire of Todd and Sara to share authentic flavors with a larger audience. Thus, the two made the decision to combine their backgrounds and open a restaurant. Todd, the grandson of George Daskalakis, a Cretan who emigrated from Greece to the United States in the early 20th century, grew up in the kitchen cooking alongside his mother. His love of Greek food and the country's food culture deepened while studying abroad in Greece as a university student, during which time he grew closer to his Greek relatives and learned their recipes. Sara Park majored in dairy science during university and although she pursued a career in another field after graduating, saw her interest in cheesemaking intensify and Korea's cheese market evolving while working with Eathentic. Considering that availability and awareness of feta cheese in general was lower than it could be, what better way to improve upon this reality than by combining Nostimo's homestyle Greek food with the Greek staple, feta cheese.

Considering the dearth of Greek food in Korea, the two co-owners at first were concerned that the saltiness of feta cheese and Kalamata olives may be an issue with their customers. Furthermore, as Greek wine is less familiar to Korean consumers, Todd and Sara had thought initially that showcasing Greek wines at Nostimo may receive a lukewarm response from their customers. Thankfully, in both cases, the opposite has proven to be true. During a typical service, either Sara or Todd do their best to visit every table and explain the menu and ingredients in the food to alleviate any initial qualms for customers trying Greek food for the first time. Although the wine list at Nostimo includes French, Italian, and Spanish labels in addition to a large variety of Greek traditional and natural wines available, ninety-nine out of one-hundred customers, whether they be Korean or non-Korean, select Greek wines with their meal. Nostimo diners are seeking not only a Greek meal, but a Greek experience.

Taking into account the promotional background of the two owners, their hope through Nostimo is to shine a spotlight not only on the most well-known Greek dishes, but also cuisine from different areas around the country. As an example, Nostimo recently established a relationship with the Greek island of Naxos. The owner of a resort on Naxos sent some of the island's representative ingredients to Nostimo for which a special Naxos menu will soon be created. Through such win-win initiatives, people in Korea will learn more about Naxos, awareness of both the island and the resort will grow in Korea, and Nostimo will be established as not only a restaurant, but a culture-promoting venue. The restaurant hopes to establish similar relationships with other areas throughout Greece.

Since opening, some of the most common feedback the owners of Nostimo have received, in addition to praise for the food, is that having a meal there for an hour or two makes diners feel like they aren't in Korea. Since international travel is nearly impossible nowadays considering the global situation, this is exactly the type of feeling and experience Nostimo is trying to convey.

Baker Hughes: Leading ESG Strategy for the Energy Industry

On February 24, ECCK held a webinar with Lorenzo Simonelli, Chairman and CEO of Baker Hughes, on the topic of "Leading ESG Strategy for the Energy Industry". It was the first edition of ECCK's virtual webinar series on United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (UN-SDGs).

The webinar opened with a congratulatory remark from H.E. Ban Ki-moon, 8th Secretary-General of United Nations. "SDGs is essential and of outstanding importance that we continuously and actively raise the significance of the transformative promise of the sustainable development goals.", said H.E. Ban during his remarks. "When there is a strong tripartite partnership between government, business leaders and civil societies, there is nothing which we cannot do. We need to count on private sectors to help drive further success, and we will all benefit from robust vision and action by companies to set the right sustainable business strategies and corporate culture."

"That's why I am so pleased that the ECCK has organized this webinar series with global business leaders to share their experiences and commitment with us.", added H.E. Ban Ki-moon.

Following the congratulatory remark, Chairman Simonelli presented on "Leading ESG Strategy for the Energy Industry" in which he discussed Baker Hughes' commitment and concerted efforts to meet the sustainable development goals. "We advance our purpose through our values and that shapes how we work at the most basic level our values of grow, collaborate, lead and care at the embodiment of the UN sustainable development goals.", said Chairman Simonelli. "As a signatory of the UN Global Compact, we support the Paris climate agreement and believe that individuals, corporations and all national governments must collaborate to achieve the goals of that landmark agreement. The global energy sector must pursue a path to net zero carbon emissions by mid-century. We are positioning Baker Hughes as the leading energy technology company to help enable the energy transition supporting our customers efforts to reduce their carbon footprint with a range of emissions reduction products."

The webinar is open to public on ECCK's YouTube Channel:

From February through December 2021, ECCK will hold virtual webinar series each month, featuring leading individuals from global companies advancing the SDGs, including BASF, Swiss Re, Solvay, Evonik, Lego, and Kyobo Life; etc. The webinar series will discuss business practices and corporate vision and efforts on implementation of the UN-SDGs.

Christoph Heider, President of ECCK, said, "United Nations Sustainable Development Goals is a very important milestone in opening the future for the next generation. We believe that this webinar series will provide a platform to promote the importance of the efforts and roles of private sector for the successful implementation of the SDGs and to explore various solutions to the challenges for businesses."
